Inetum, a Business to Business to Society company, has strengthened its ties with the École Militaire Interarmes by supporting the participation in the CCE 2025 of four second lieutenants from the 63rd graduating class "Ceux du Sahel", named in tribute to the 59 French troops who fell in the Sahel between 2013 and 2022. This major nautical competition, Europe's first student regatta, helps to democratize the practice of sailing.

The four EMIA second lieutenants and one wounded veteran, all members of the LVPSR charity, proudly represented the values of the 63rd graduating class, the LVPSR charity and Inetum during the race which took place from April 5 to 12, 2025.

Every day, Inetum's 28,000 consultants and specialists aim for digital impact with solutions that contribute to performance, innovation and the common good. It is in this context that the Group was keen to support the project led by the four second lieutenants, thus reinforcing its proximity to the Army.

"The feat achieved by the second lieutenants and the war-wounded veteran is a lesson in resilience and solidarity. Our support for the École Militaire Interarmes in this project is further proof of our dedication to supporting institutions and our commitment to making a positive impact on society." David Gendry, Chief Marketing, Communication and Public Affairs Officer, Inetum.

"We are extremely grateful for Inetum's support in this endeavor. For us, the EDHEC boat race is much more than a sporting competition, it's a way of making sport, (in this case sailing) accessible to everyone. Inetum's commitment to us is testament to their desire to make a positive difference in society." Pierre-Jean Raffi, President of the 63rd graduating class of the École militaire interarmes (EMIA).
