Inetum rewarded as Best European Company in Digital Transformation at the European Technology Awards

Two weeks after receiving the Numeum and KPMG "Growth Strategy" award in France, the Inetum Group was named best European company in terms of digital transformation at the European Technology Awards. These awards, which are organised by the Professional and Business Excellence Institute and presented at a gala event on 2 December at the Ritz Hotel in Paris, aim to promote excellence and knowledge through teaching, research and proactive networking.

Inetum, a European leader in digital services and solutions, has been named Best European Company in the Digital Transformation category at the European Technology Awards 2021, for its outstanding work in the technology sector in Europe, which makes Inetum a benchmark in its category. Inetum (formerly Gfi and IECISA) is an agile IT company providing digital services and solutions, and a global group that helps companies and institutions make the most of the digital flow. Present in 26 countries, the Group has nearly 27,000 employees and in 2020 generated revenues of €1.966 billion.

Carlos Muñoz, CEO of Inetum in Iberia-LATAM, highlights Inetum's active participation in projects involving the digitisation of entire ecosystems in all sectors: "Through our differential offer, Inetum contributes to the growth of companies and institutions that we accompany in their digitisation process thanks to our solid knowledge of sectors, which allows us to adapt the value proposition to the specific needs of each market by taking advantage of the opportunities provided by Cloud, IoT, Artificial Intelligence, Blockchain, Big Data and other technologies."

The European Technology Awards seek to disseminate talent internationally, bringing different professionals, companies and institutions together in one place where the sharing of ideas, projects and references take centre stage. The awards, which this year celebrate their second edition, are presented at a gala event at the Ritz Hotel in Paris, which for the occasion becomes a buzzing space for technology networking.
